Where is the South Ossetian military located?

Nestled in the Greater Caucasus Mountains, their headquarters is in the capital of Tskhinvali, with their commander-in-chief being the head of state Alan Gagloyev. With the assistance of the Russian military stationed at the 4th Guards Military Base, the South Ossetian military exists to resist any attempt by Georgia to retake the territory.

How many Rifle Battalions are in South Ossetia?

The reserve component, largely filled by conscripts on an annual basis, consists of 9 Rifle battalions, typically light infantry in nature. At an international level, South Ossetia is largely seen by the international community as a part of Georgia, as and such the AFSO as an illegal armed organization.

Who controls South Ossetian AO?

Currently, its territory is controlled by the breakaway Republic of South Ossetia. The population of the South Ossetian AO consisted mostly of ethnic Ossetians, who made up roughly 66% of the 100,000 people living there in 1989, and Georgians, who constituted a further 29% of the population as of 1989.

How many people live in South Ossetian AO?

The population of the South Ossetian AO consisted mostly of ethnic Ossetians, who made up roughly 66% of the 100,000 people living there in 1989, and Georgians, who constituted a further 29% of the population as of 1989. Following the Russian revolution, the area of modern South Ossetia became part of the Democratic Republic of Georgia.

How did the south ossitian military come out?

The South Ossitian military came out of this by having the first armed groups formed to create a South Ossetian Republican Guard. This Republican Guard, however, was more than a conglomeration of local militias and popular armed groups; assistance from North Ossetia came in the form of irregular troops.

What language did the South Ossetian AO speak?

Most people in the South Ossetian AO spoke Ossetian, with smaller numbers using Russian and Georgian; all three were official languages of the region.
